Syn. Verbergen, Verheben, Verhehlen, Verheimlichen, Verheimlichen. In the first place, a person verbergt (hides), for the sake of security, but the expression has been generalized so, that it is said to be verbergen, what is not known. We say that the ways of Providence are verbergen (hidden) from the human understanding. That is verbergt, which is not intended to be seen; thus a person verbergt (hides, secretes, conceals) something under his cloak or behind a door, &c. A person verbergt something by preventing it from becoming known to those who have an interest in gaining a knowledge of it. A person verbergt, dissembles the truth, when he does not wish another to know it. A person, however, verbergt (passes over in silence, suppresses) that which he does not make known himself either by speech or writing. A Roman Catholic priest must verbergen what he hears in the confessional. A person verheimlicht (conceals, keeps secret) that which it is his bounden duty to reveal.

Verbesserlich, adj. that may be improved; amendable, corrigible; improvable.

Verbessern, v. a. to better, improve, meliorate; to amend, correct, reform.

Syn. Verbessern, Beßern. When a person begins to lessen the number of faults in something, he then beßert (better, ameliorates or improves) it; as soon as it receives the full perfection that its nature admits of, by having had those faults gradually amended, it then is verbessert, i. e. perfected or perfectionated. An author beßert (corrects) his work in order to verbessern (improve) it, or by his emendations to give it that degree of perfection which may be expected from a work of that description.

T. s.* ein tief verbundenes Schiff, a deep-waisted ship; ein niedrig verbundenes Schiff, a low-built vessel.

ein tief verbundenes Zwischenstück, a ship which is very high between decks.
yn. Verbinden, Verpflichten; Verbindlichkeit, Pflicht. In English "bound" is a stronger expression than "obliged," in German verpflichtet is stronger than verbunden, and it is so used in the courts of law in both countries. A person having entered upon a new office, is verpflichtet (bound) by an oath to discharge its duties with truth and loyalty, to do which he was already verbunden (morally obliged) by his acceptance of the office. Verbindlichkeit is the moral necessity (obligation), Pflicht is the act which is incumbent on a person bound to it to perform. One says therefore, to act in accordance with one's Verbindlichkeit, i. e. to fulfil one's moral obligations and to do one's Pflicht (duty).

Verderben, v. tr. a. (einem etwas) to blame for; to misconstrue.

Syn. Verderben, Verargen, Verübeln. When a person thinks it wrong, injudicious or foolish on the part of another, he uses verderben, and indeed because he considers that the other is principally injuring himself by what he is doing. But when that other person injures others by what he is doing, then the former thinks it wrong or wicked in him to do so, this he expresses by verargen. A person verdenkt it on the part of the buyer, when he gives more for an article, than it is worth, and on the part of the seller when he sells that article at a loss or under its fair market-value; both do not act rightly, but they only injure themselves. A person verargt it of a man otherwise estimable, if he lends money to a young spendthrift. For, by doing so, he injures another. When a person takes anything ill or amiss, &c. when he thinks that another has acted wrong towards him, he then uses verübeln.

Verdrieß, m. + vid. Verdruß.

Verdießen, v. tr. imp. to grieve, fret, vex, chagrin; to trouble; es verdrießt mich, it grieves, vexes, irks me; sich — lassen, to be grieved, vexed, to take offence at; sich keine Mühe, keine Kosten — lassen, to grudge no pains no expenses; ich verdrießt die Arbeit nie, he never dislikes labour; vid. Syn. Dauern.

Verdießlich, I. adj. 1. fretful, crabbed, morose, peevish, sullen, out of humour; 2. troublesome, irksome, vexatious, disagreeable, loathsome; einen — machen, to fret one; ein —er Wort fall, a vexatious event; II. adv. irksomely, fretfully, &c., troublesomely, &c.; reluctantly.

Syn. Verdrießlich, Vergerlich, Grämlich, Launisch, Mürrisch. Verdrießlich and argerlich are distinguished from the rest by this, that the motives or reasons of the former are objective, whilst those of the latter are subjective. It is usual, therefore, to assign the cause or motive why a person is verdrießlich and argerlich. An impatient person soon becomes verdrießlich, if he is kept waiting too long, and a passionate person soon becomes argerlich, particularly if he thinks that it has been done on purpose. Moreover those persons are said to be argerlich, who are easily vexed about trifles; invalids, for instance, are generally argerlich. He that complains and laments, is grämlich; he that is mürrisch, is constantly finding fault; he that is launisch, is inconstant, at times pleased, at other times displeased, without having any just cause for either, sometimes he is grämlich and mürrisch, sometimes cheerful and contented. Children can easily be grämlich but not mürrisch, for they can complain but not find fault. Spoiled children and women too delicately nurtured are launisch. Hence it appears that verdrießlich means sore, argerlich, indignant, touchy, testy, and also cross, peevish; grämlich is whining, fretful; mürrisch, capricious, fickle; and mürrisch, grunting, scolding, snappish.

Verdrießlichkeit, f. (pl. -en) 1. fretfulness, moroseness, peevishness, ill humour; 2. irksomeness, troublesomeness, vexatious matter.

Verdröffen, I. adj. 1. not cheerful, toath, unwilling, disinclined, averse; 2. lazy, slow, dull; II. adv. unwillingly, aversely; lazily, slowly.

Verdrüben, Verdrüßlich, vid. Verzerben, Verdrüßlich.

Verdrüß, m. (-ßes) 1. ill-will, indignation, anger, spite, pet; 2. vexation, trouble, chagrin; — machen, to vex, chagrin, spite; etwas zu einem — ffe thun, to do something to vex one; allen Menschen zum — ffe, to the vexation, in spite of, every body.

Syn. Verdrüß, Verger. Verdrüß (originally de amo us plage) is merely the soreness or displeasure itself, which that causes us which any one does, Verger is an anger, an irritation, which works more upon the feeling itself, than upon external objects. Verdrüß depresses, Verger exorts the mind. When the injustice com- mitted by others affects us nearly, it makes us sad; when we regard it as deserving of punishment, we anger us at it. Verdrüß affects the mind, Verger the gall. Hence it appears that Verdrüß is vexation, Verger annoyance, irritation. vid. also Widergauen.

Syn. Verhtten, Auffhrung, Betragen, Benehmen. The Auffhrung of a young man is ascertained by many of his actions. They say, for instance, the Auffhrung of a young man is good or bad. Verhtten is the agreement between our active and passive conduct, and the duties which we have to do under certain circumstances. In Betragen we consider acts in so far as they are merits or defects of the understanding and of the heart. Soldiers have sich verhalten (conducted themselves) well, n. as much as they have performed their duty, and have sich betragen (behaved) well, in so far as that which they have done, is a proof of their valour, the chief virtue with persons of their profession. In the one instance, they have sich verhalten (kept themselves) strict to their duty, in the other they have sich betragen (borne or carried themselves) courageously and sooly. Benehmen is the result and sign of prudence, skill, address, pilancy, presence of mind, or else of the absence of these qualities. This, therefore, is "behaviour" and Auffhrung "conduct."

Verkaufen, v. n. to sell, vend, dispose of; mit Schaden —, to undersell.

Syn. Verkaufen, Verhandeln, Abfehen, Verkaufen. The parting with any article for a certain price is denoted by Verkaufen and Verhandeln. Verkaufen differs, however, from Verkaufen in this, that it alludes to or implies a longer or shorter negotiation, in which an agreement is entered into concerning the final conditions of the contract. The act of offering on both sides is called Verhandeln. Such a Verhandeln may last some time, when both parties are very intent upon increasing their own advantage, and hence Verhandeln frequently expresses Verkaufen together with the necessary idea of self-advantage, and is, therefore, used in a contemptuous sense. Abfehen, is selling the goods in so far as the stock of goods is lessened by their sale; this can take place by supplying a large order from one single person, when any one disposes of a great number of them to several buyers, and especially living remote from each other, then one says, he verkauft them, or he carries on a large Verkauf in this article. Hence Verkaufen is "to sell." Verhandeln "to bargain," Abfehen "to dispose of," and Verkaufen "to carry on business, to do business."

Berleumden, n. a. to backbite, calumniate, slander, traduce, defame.

Syn. Berleumden, Berunglimpfen, Bäsferen, Anschmäzen, Spittereiden. He who berleumdet a person to others, relates to them false or unsubstantiated facts to the detriment of that person's character. He who berunglimpt him, judges his qualities or actions harshly, liberally, odiously. The highest degree of berleumden is Soften. For one fact, that person, on whose perfectly moral and honourable actions and in whose genuine good qualities one passes a judgment degrading in the highest degree. According to this definition, therefore, berleumden is "to backbite or to scandalize," for scandal is either false or not proved, Berunglimpfen is "to cry down, to detract from, to asperse," and letters is "to calumniate, to slander, to vilify." Now berleumden and berunglimpfen together constitute an offence, in so far as the person so berleumdet and berunglimpt, stood in good repute previously, and in so far as the motive for such scandal was the exciting of suspicion and distrust against him. This is therefore "to backbite, to libel, to traduce." Spittereiden is to judge trivial, say, the most trivial faults with too much severity. It has generally for its object that of convincing others of one's own immaculate conduct and of inducing others to form a high opinion of the strictness of one's own principles. This is "to carp, or cavil at," or more familiarly but more correctly "to pick holes, to run down."

Berleumder, m. (—s; pl. —) backbiter, calumniator, slanderer, false accuser.

Berleumderisch, I. adj. calumnious, slanderous, backbiting, defaming, detracting, traducing; — er Weise, calumniously; II. adv. calumniously, slanderously.

Vermögensb. adj. 1. powerful strong; 2. able; 3. rich, opulent, wealthy.

Syn. Vermögend, Vermittelt, Wohlhaben, Begüterter, Reich. The two first denote a man, who possesses sufficient property or means to procure himself some degree of comfort. Wohlhaben expresses a greater amount of property or means. A man is wohlhaben, when he has a competency and when his income enables him to procure all the comforts which his station in life and his habits can rationally desire. Begüterter is stronger still than wohlhaben and is principally said of those, whose property either entirely or partly is vested in land or tenements. Reich is the highest term, and expresses a great superabundance of all temporal possessions. Vermögend is, therefore, "substantial," bemittelt "of some means, of means," wohlhaben "well off, independent, or well to do," begütert, "of real property," and reich "rich or wealthy."

(etwas) to hear, examine, try one; ich habe nichts davon vernommen, I have heard nothing of it; sich mit Jemandem —, to deliberate with a person, to come to an understanding; sich — lassen, to express one's self, intimate, give one's opinion.

Syn. I. Vernehmen, Hören. We hear (hören) a sound, when it generally makes an impression on our organs of hearing, but we only vernehmen it, when we distinguish it; hence vernehmen in this sense is "to hear distinctly."

Syn. II. Vernehmen, Verstehen. In order to understand a speech fully, it is necessary, first, that we properly distinguish the syllables and words, of which it is composed, and secondly, that we sufficiently recognize the sense of the speech by means of those words and their context. But to do this, it is further requisite, that we be sufficiently acquainted with the language employed by the speaker, and with the subject he discourses upon. Hence it is evident that however distinctly a person may vernehmen (hear) or catch the words, which the speaker utters, he will be totally unable to verstehen (understand) his without previously having a knowledge of the language used, or, if in his own language, of the things forming the topic of that discourse.

I. a. 1.* to assure, protest, to ascertain; 2. to insure, assure; einem eine Sache —, to make one sure of a thing; ich verfichere Sie or Ihnen, I assure you; ein Schiff und dessen Ladung —, to insure a ship and cargo; II. refl. 1. to make one's self sure of a thing; 2. to obtain certain information; 3. to take possession of; sich etwas, or von einer Sache —, to assure or make one's self sure of; sich einer Person or Sache —, to secure, arrest one or a thing, to make sure of him or it.

Syn. Verfichern, Sichereit geben, Sichereit stellen. Verfichern takes place even if men believe, whether the danger, which some apprehend, be a pure error (in other respects a harmless one), or whether it be a loss of one's property. Now an insurance-office verfichert (insures) ships, buildings, estates, &c.; verfichert (insures) lives. Sichereit geben and stellen take place by removing the apprehension, that some one will not act up to his obligations, and either can take place by several modes of proceeding. Sichereit stellen, by the more formal word stellen, is distinguished from Sichereit geben, inasmuch as it takes place before legal authorities. This is, therefore, "to give or find bail," the other is "to give security."

Syn. I. Verstellen, Verunstalten, Entstellen. Verstellen merely denotes, that a man by an alteration of his figure has become difficult to be recognized, without deciding, whether he has become uglier in consequence of his alteration. Verunstalten denotes that his figure has lost more or less of its beauty and perfection. Entstellen expresses both these ideas together; he who is entstellt, is uglier and less perfect as to his form, and in consequence of this impairment has become so changed as not to be recognized. Every kind of mutilation verunstaltet (impairs) a man; but it does not follow, that it verstellt (disguises), and entstellt (disfigures) him, if it does not at the same time render it impossible or very difficult for people to recognize him.

Syn. II. Verstellen (sich), Stellen (sich). Sich verstellen is not to allow one's real opinions to be known; sich stellen is to endeavour to palm off upon another as one's opinions those which are not so in reality; the first is, therefore, "to dissemble," the second "to feign, to simulate." The antithesis between them is shown in the Latin line:—"Quod non es simulas, dissimulasque quod es." Du stellst dich (das zu seyn, was du nicht bist), und du verstellst dich (das zu seyn, was du bist).

Vormalig, adv. formerly, in former times, afore time, heretofore.

Vorm, Vormals, Vor Zeiten, Ehemals, Vordiesem, Vor Alters, Weitland. The most remote and venerable antiquity is denoted by vor Alters (in ancient times); Vor Alters (in early ages, in olden times, in times of yore) men reached a more advanced age than now. Vor Zeiten (in former times) does not designate so remote a period, nevertheless it is distinguished from vormals and ehemals by its pointing out an intermediate time of several ages, whilst vormals and ehemals may signify a time past in the same generation or age. One says then: In former times (or Zeiten) the nobles of Europe lived in their castles and in a constant state of feud. When vormals and ehemals are used of a period of time that is past, the former denotes a comparison with the present. This is denoted by "formerly." Vor diesem (see now, before this) denotes quite an indefinite past time, which may have formed part of the life-time of the speaker, or may have been before his time. Zeitland (heretofore) is in common life obsolete; it is still used in the chancery style, and is equivalent to ehemals.

Syn. Vorrede, Vorbericht. It is expected that a Vorbericht (advice to the reader) should be short, and that a Vorrede (preface) should be longer. In the Vorbericht, therefore, only certain circumstances are commonly mentioned, which may be useful for the reader to know. In a Vorrede this is done not only more diffusely, but even the object and utility of the book, of the manner, in which the reader ought to use it, of the importance of the subject, matter, &c. are mentioned. In English an Introduction is usually somewhat longer than a Preface; Vorbericht (preamble) may therefore be safely rendered by Preface and Vorrede by Introduction.

Syn. Waffen, Gewehr, Rüstung, Weis, Schild, Stüd, Geseß, Waffen, Wech, and Rüstung are first of all such instruments of war as the warrior carries at or on his body; Weis (artillery ordnance) such as follow the army and are drawn by animals, ar, cannon. The word Waffen (weapons) denotes in its most extended sense every thing that can be used for attack, for defence or protection; hence even such limbs of animals as serve for attack or defence are called Waffen, ar, horns, teeth, claws, &c. In the more limited sense we understand by Waffen (arms) the artificial portable instruments which the warrior uses as well for attack as defence. Under the word Rüstung we understand all the usual artificial Waffen of the warrior as well for attack as for protection; his accoutrements or equipment, or else his mail, helmet, harness, armlets and greaves or in a word his "armour." Gewehr comprise only instruments of attack and not weapons of defence; they are "arms of offence." The word Stüd is used for single cannons ("= piece"), thus we have drei, sechs, unzahlbare Stüde, three-pouncers, six-pouncers, twelve pounders. The word Weis is now obsolete as a military term, though still used by poets; it corresponds to the English "bolt or shaft."

Syn. Warten, Abwarten, Erwarten. The main idea conveyed by warten (to wait) is that of remaining in the same situation. (In one place or position) without requiring any secondary idea to complete its full meaning. I have gewartet (waited) here more than an hour, merely says: I can no longer remain inactive, I must resolve upon something. Abwarten (await) adds to the idea of warten the preponderating secondary idea of continuing or persevering until the desired result is obtained, which puts an end to the warten. Finally erwarten (to expect) is distinguished from both by the prominent accessory idea of something about to happen. According to the nature of this something is the erwarten either agreeable or disagreeable; vid. also warten.

Syn. Wérth, Preis, Gehalt. The judgment arrived at concerning the goodness of things is their Wérth (worth). The Preis (price) is that, which is considered equal to the Wérth of anything, especially in money. The Preis of things can rise or fall, without their Wérth (real value) being increased or lessened. The Gehalt is the real value of the nobler metals and of the coins struck from them. Gold and silver, for instance, are alloyed with base metal; the less, therefore, they contain of alloy, by so much the higher, and the more they contain of it, by so much the lower is their Gehalt (that is standard).

Syn. Wetter, Witterung, Witterung denotes those changeable circumstances, which commonly change according to the difference of climates and seasons, the Wetter those which change under the same climate and during the same season of the year. Witterung signifies the nature of the atmosphere during a longer period of time, Wetter during a shorter. The Germans say: it is beautiful Wetter (weather), when the sun shines and it is not rainy or windy; on the other hand the Witterung (climate or weather) is by so much the more severe in a country, the further it lies to the north. They say, moreover, to-day is beautiful Wetter (weather), but this spring, this summer, &c. we have beautiful Witterung. In English "weather" has both significations, and "climate" or "season" can seldom be substituted for it in translating Witterung.

Zins, Zinsen, Zinsfuss, Zinsen and Zenten consist only of that which is given or received for the use of a piece of ground or of capital. Zinsfuss, on the other hand, comprehend all kinds of useful things, which come in, as it were, yearly to any one. The merchant reckons up the profits of his trade, the artist the payments for the productions of his art, the person on pay counts in his pay as part of his Zinsfuss, as well as doing so with his Zenten and Zinsen. In general Zenten are opposed to the Zinsfuss from a salary or from the profit of a trade; they also include the Zinsen of one's capital (compare Wetzing, Wetzingen). Zins and Zente are distinguished, however, thus, that Zins (interest) signifies that sum, which the giver is obliged to pay and which the capitalist or proprietor has the right of demanding; zine (zente), however, in as much as the proprietor or capitalist receives it and by that means increases his Zinsfuss (income). Hence it will be seen that Zins and Zente, especially the former, do not exactly mean the same thing which "interest and rent" do in Eng-lish.

Syn. Zörn, Grimm. Grimm is distinguished from Zörn internally by the greater degree of its strength acting on the senses and the passions, and externally by the violence of the expression of the looks and gestures. Grimm is an excess and cannot long continue in its fits and convulsive effects; it consumes itself.
Zörn (wrath, anger) disfigures the human face, but not so much as Grimm, nay, there may be a noble Zörn (anger), a beautiful Zörn (passion); but a woman, that is ergrimmt (furious), is something horrible. Grimm is therefore “fury, frantic passion.”

Syn. Zumuthen (einem etw.), Berlangen (etwas von einem), Anfragen (einem etw.). Berlangen denotes that we solicit directly something from any one, of whatever nature the request may be. Zumuthen or Zumessen is directed to something that is difficult or vexatious, and which the other considers wrong or disadvantageous to himself, and to which he does not consider himself bound, or the party zumuthend or anathema justified in doing; Anfragen denotes something of this sort to be present to the inward thoughts of another, or merely to think that he also must be convinced, that he must do the same for us. The first word is therefore "to exact," the second "to desire or demand," the third "to require or to pretend to."

Syn. Zutragen (sich), Befolgen, Erzeugen (sich), Begeben (sich), Begehen, Vorfallen, Geschehen (to happen, take place) is spoken of all events or changes; it is the result of doing. If any one does any thing, it geschieht (takes place); e. g. "Light the candle!" — "It is already geschehen (done)." The same is expressed by passiren (to come to pass), but with the joint idea, that that which vorgeht excites special attention and interest. Precisely this expression of meaning is possessed also by vorfallen (to fall out or upon), but with the secondary idea, that that which vorfällt (happens), happens unexpectedly. A change which excites peculiar attention, alters the state of things and with which a longer succession of changes founded on it and consequent upon each other, begins — such a change begebt sich (happens, befalls); it is a Begebenheit (event, incident). When one considers an event with respect to its changes, whether it is regarded as an effect of physical necessity or considered as a mere effect of chance, then one says, it has sich zugetragen (has been brought about). In sometimes chances, happens, turns out (tragf sich), that certain circumstances (the event occurred, it happened) that a scolding broke, by which many persons lost their lives.

	e, i, ie, ö, ü.
VII.	a	u	a	Schlagen, to beat,	schlug,	geschlagen.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

I. The first class changes the radical vowel e into a in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex. Geben, to give; imperf. gab; past part. gegeben. To this class must be added: bitten, to entreat (beg), which changes the radical vowel i in the same manner, as: imperf. bat; past part. gebeten.

II. The second class changes the radical vowel e or i into a in the imperfect, and in the past participle into o. Ex. Nehmen, to take; imperf. nahm; past part. genommen; gewinnen, to win; imperf. gewann; past part. gewonnen. To these must be added, gebären, produce (to give birth to), which has ä instead of i in the root, as: imperf. gebär; past part. geboren.

III. The third class changes the radical vowel i into a in the imperfect, and in the past part. into u. Ex. Schlingen, to sling; imperf. schlang; past part. geschlungen; except dingen, to hire; imperf. dung; past part. gedungen; schinden, to flay; imperf. schind; past part. geschunden; and thun, to do; imperf. that; past part. gethan.

IV. The fourth class changes the radical vowel a into ie in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex. Halten, to hold; imperf. hielt; past part. gehalten; except fangen, to catch; imperf. fing; past part. gefangen. The following conform to the principle of the rule, resuming in the past part. the radical vowel or diphthong of the present: laufen, to run; imperf. lief; past part. gelaufen; gehen, to go; imperf. ging; past part. gegangen; heißen, to order; imperf.ieß; past part. gegeben; rufen, to call; imperf. rief; past part. gerufen; stoßen, to push; imperf. stieß; past part. gestoßen.

V. The fifth class changes the radical vowel ei into ie in the imperf. and in the past part. or before a double consonant into i. Ex. Bleiben, to remain; imperf. blieb; past part. geblieben; schneiden, to cut; imperf. schnitt; past part. geschnitten.

VI. The sixth class changes the radical vowels: ä, au, e, i, ie, ö, ü, into o in the imperf. and past participle. Ex. Schwären, to swear; imperf. schwor; past part. geschworen; saugen, to suck; imperf. sog; past part. gesogen; saufen, to drink to excess; imperf. soff; past part. gesoffen; heben, to lift; imperf. hob; past part. gehoben; verwirren, to embroil (to confuse); imperf. verwirr; past part. verwirren; bieten, to offer; imperf. bot; past part. geboten; schwören, to swear; imperf. schwor (schwur); past part. geschworen; lügen, to lie; imperf. log; past part. gelogen.

VII. The seventh class changes the radical vowel a into u in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex. Wachsen, to grow; imperf. wuchs; past part. gewachsen; stehen, to stand, has stand in the imperfect (formerly, however, stund), and in the past part. gestanden.

* The 5th and 6th classes include the greater part of the irregular verbs.

LIST OF THE IRREGULAR VERBS BELONGING TO EACH OF THE ABOVE CLASSES SEVERALLY.

The Asterisk (*) marks the verbs which are also conjugated regularly, when they have an active or transitive sense. The persons and tenses not indicated here, are regular, or are formed from the persons and tenses given. Derivative and compound verbs are conjugated like their primitives.
